Indigita obtains ISO 27001 certification for its Information Security Management System (ISMS)

Geneva, 7 February 2023 - Swiss regtech company Indigita SA successfully completed the ISO/IEC 27001:2013 certification. The global standard specifies the requirements for establishing, implementing, maintaining and continually improving an information security management system, and represents the most well-known standard in this field.

By complying with the ISO/IEC 27001:2013 standard, Indigita highlights its focus on information security and the protection of client data. The certification has been granted on the back of Indigita's information security management system and processes designed to secure the confidentiality, integrity and availability of information assets.

The ISO certification brings a range of benefits to Indigita and its stakeholders, such as secured information, regardless of form, including paper-based, cloud-based and local digital storage. Adhering to the standard also increases resilience in the face of information security threats and possible vulnerabilities. Thanks to a centrally managed framework, all information is secured in one place.

Indigita CEO Achille Deodato said about the certification: "The protection of client data and the security of information entrusted to us have always been at the core of our business. By attaining ISO certification, we have a tangible recognition of our efforts. With our products and services, we help financial institutions mitigate risk and conduct their business in a safe manner. When it comes to our own business, we're aiming for the same."
